GRATITUDE

Following the terror attacks of September 11, 2001, many of us were introduced to a new safety mantra:

If you see something, say something.

There is another way to use this phrase, one that humans of all backgrounds have affirmed throughout the centuries.

When you see something good, say thank you.

The secret of living well is gratitude. That means we are seeing something in our lives for which to be thankful, and saying so. A habit of gratitude has been shown to lower stress levels, increase happiness, and even extend life expectancy.

Perhaps no single practice is more effective to helping us move past discontentment than keeping a log of things for which we are grateful.
